The way we interact and react with our children is a pure reflection of what goes on inside our own hearts. Of what is encrusted and deeply rooted. It is often our repressed memories manifesting. Other times it is our adult life, our lack of time, of patience, restricted by our own experiences, by our consuming schedules, by our problematic relationships, by our states of mind projecting, that prevents us from connecting with our children and raising our children in a positive, peaceful, rich way. Breaking away from classic myths of education, reconstructing inner consciousness, activating new feelings, new thoughts and new beliefs, transforming self-experiences into a positive and constructive legacy, make all parents rich. Rich Parent, Poor Parent places children side by side with adults as their companions of journey but it also demonstrates the...
