Not illustrated. 1895 Excerpt: .college at Bradford, at that time under the presidency of Dr. Acworth. Though he never set himself to achieve academic distinction in his college days, he was a careful and devoted student, and won for himself the admiring friendship of his tutors and fellow students. His ministerial life extended over a period of thirty-six years, during which time he settled over Churches as follows: --In 1858 at Hinckley, in 1866 at Brightside, in 1870 again at Hinckley, in 1874 at New Lenton, Nottingham, in 1879 at Queensbury, and in 1885 at Nuneaton. In each of his pastorates he exerted a gracious influence, and enjoyed the profound respect and warm affection of his people. While an ardent lover of all men, young people had the warmest place in his heart. Among them he found the most congenial department of his ministry, and accomplished the best work of his life. By individual attention and frank dealing, more than by preaching, he induced very many of them to yield to the Saviour and to enter the fellowship of His Church. It was no doubt his practical interest in the young which suggested to his mind the thought of leaving his library to the students of Rawdon College, an example, by the way, which other ministers might wisely follow. Mr. Parkinson was a lifelong abstainer, and a ready helper of every movement which pertains to the uplifting of the people. As a preacher he was not only careful and sedulous...
